

ALFAPTE.COM

GRAMMAR

- Rule #2 -

➤ Difference between must have & might have:

Must have:

When you are sure about something then you don't use might, you use must.

- When you wake up and see the fine for traffic, then you say:

I must have done something wrong.

- When someone comes with sweets:

He must have scored.

- A shop usually closes at 10 pm, but today closed at 7pm:

Working hours must have been changed.

- You got late for work, now not taking the manager's call:

He must be late.

Might have:

When we want to talk about something in the past, and we are not sure, but there is a possibility then we use might have + 3rd form.

- When someone goes back from Australia.

He might have struggled a lot to find a job.

ALFAPTE.COM

GRAMMAR

You might have missed the examples.

You might have worked really hard for this.

➤ Difference between must be and might be:

Must be:

- When you are sure about something

He must be sleeping.

He must have parked in the wrong place.

Might be:

- When you are not sure. (Possibility)

He might be sleeping.

He might get late.

alfapte.com

ALFAPTE.COM

GRAMMAR

- Difference between should have, shouldn't have and should be:

Should have:

- It is something you didn't do in the past, which would have been better for you.

You should have prepared your material beforehand.

You should have discussed this beforehand.

You should have known this in school

You should have called him.

Shouldn't have:

- It is something you did in the past, which was not good for you.

You shouldn't have so much chocolate

You shouldn't have said that.

You shouldn't have avoided the call.

Should be:

- It is like a piece of advice (can be used with should + present form or should be + adjective)

You should be attentive, or you should pay attention

You should be careful.

He should be happy about it.